BY MISS L. VIRGINIA SMITH.

Smith .- Newport News.

I love thee, Lide, when Spring awakes,
The fairy peopled flowers,
And early sunshine softly breaks
On emerald-tinted flowers.
When echoes through the green arcades
The zephyra viewless flute.
And in the morning cloud, the lark
Tumes his sarial tuc.
I love thee, for our playmates then
Are bird, and breeze and bee,
Yet Spring, when thou art far away,
Has not of joy for me.

I love thee, Lide, when Summer-time, O'er the blue Ocean amiles, And flings her royal banners forth Upon his thousand isles, When from the sun the fountain's spray A rosy flush receives, A rosy flush receives,
And the sweet south-wind steals along
To kiss the whispering leaves;
When white winged cloudlets wander up
The zenith far and free,—
The zenith far and free,—
They thee, and if they art gone
They have no charms for me.

With many a gorgeous hue
Is painting beauty on the wood
And oh the mountain blue,
When Indian Summer's mellow haze,
O'er all the valley lies,
And sheds above the bleakest spot

Thy rosy lip, and azure ey s,
They have no light or me. I love thee, Lide, when Winter's chain
Is on the streamlet's springs,
And round the casement drearily.
The wailing night-wind sings;
For then beside the glowing hearth.
Thy check is prest to mine,
As bending o'er some pleasant book,
Our 'nut-brown curis' entwine;
I love thee, and the witching page
Or games of laughling giee,

I lose thee ever, and my heart
Amid its airy dreams,
Still turns to thee, its better part,
For all its brightest beams;
Its joys and sorrows all are thine,
For unto thee is given
The sunbeam's glory,—touching earth
With huse of holy Heaven!
Then ohl when death steals o'er us, may
It take me too, with thee,
For life when then hast left it, love,
Will have no place for me.

SELECT VARIETY.

contributors, who, it is said, had written eight or ten poems, varying in length from two hundred to three thousand lines, besides any quantity of prosetales and sketches thrown off by way of relaxe-tion in the intervals of his poetical labors. Had-this been the summing up of the life's labors of some superannuated old foggy, we should never-have thought of it again; but the genius to whom-the word is unconsciously indebted for those innu-merable and interminable lines' was just twenty-one years of age, and commenced the business of s a smart chap, and no mistake. How his exam-le must shame such lazy fellows as Sprague, and congfellow, and Bryant, and Hallack, who daintionce in a great while, even in that quantity, as hough it would fain convince the world that wristing poetry is a slow and difficult work! All their excuses about waiting for a fit of inspiration, and them how to grind out poetry in the Yankee, Hail Columbia, go ahead style. His ambition is, to do: a smashing business, and he has a great contempt These title times will do for the real to but the is in the wholesale business. Indeed, our feath friend would disdain to call that a poem, which did not contain at least three hundred lines, of not less than eight syllables each. While one of your slow poets, is torturing two or three couplets from his poor, weak brain, he will dash you oil a poem of two or three lundred, and 'make nothing of it.

of two or three hundred, and 'make nothing of iteither. Poor Goldsmith thought four lines a pretty good days work, and perhaps, it was, for him; but our representative of the 'modern school,' with only three years' experience, will give you forty in, on minutes. And now, kind reader, if the fast poet does these things in the green tree, just imagine, if you can, what he will do in the dry. And after you have lone that, get out your slate and penoil, and calculate the quantity of raw material the man will onsume annually, in carrying on his poetical op erations; for you must know that there are certain staple commodities which form the basis of all poetry of the fast school. We do not profess to have gone into the matter very deeply, but from our limated knowledge of the business, we have made the following rough estimate of the quantity of poetic staples consumed annually, by one of these steam 500 beautiful maidens, assorted.

300 languishing, love-sick swains.

200 gallant youths.

300 broken hearts, past redemption. 300 broken hearts, past redemption.

100 gross pearly teeth, best description.
100 dozen sighs, very affecting.
150 pairs blue eyes, extra quality.
100 pairs black eyes, superior lustre.
300 stars, twinkling and blinking.
100 setting suns, with gorgeous clouds to match.
75 full-orbed moons, with moonshine ad infinitum.

500 gallons of tears. 300 doves, to rhyme with 'love.'

Rouge.

The Tribune says:—"We noticed a young lady (and a preity one, too.) apparently from the country, at one of Sontag's recent concerts, whose rouge would have passed without suspicion as the pure bloom of health, had it not been put on in the wrong place. The poor child was chatting away with her except, as unconsciously as though her face told no such tale against her. It reminded us of an instance where a lady gave a very large and brilliant party. The parlors of her house wertailluminated with gas, the upper rooms were not. Accordingly, when she appeared to receive her friends, the blaze of gas lights brought to view the pencil strokes and too great thickness of the conmetic, which by candle light, in her dressing-room, had, no doubt, appeared smooth and delicate beyond suspicion. And there, she went absart all evening, enjoying herself with the gayest, but not soul daring to tell her of the dra mishap which charted on every eye but hers.

Morall.—Wear no commetic but that of energies, pure air and a happy, healthy spirit, Nothing else is fit to give a lovery glow to the check of beauty but if you are fool enough to use rouge, bewern how it is put on.
